Story & Photos By Mike Daclan

HIGHLAND PARK — For those who mostly drive on Figueroa Street , their image is mostly of a long stretch of shops and buildings, with some notable landmarks, new businesses and signs of gentrification. It's easy to easy to miss the small, intimate moments that take place on the busy street every day: two men sharing a laugh; a guy sitting in the shade waiting for a ride; retro furniture given a new life; and a shattered school bus window. These small moments make up the everyday. Here are some of the moments I captured on my camera on April 30.

3 The Offbeat, A 60's Style Bar Going Into Dusty's on York

Tuesday, May 27, 2014, by Matthew Kang

Yet another compelling spot for Highland Park/Garvanza, which is almost too rich with drinking places like Hermosillo, The Greyhound, The York, and Sonny's Hideaway. The old Dusty's Sports Bar is being converted into The Offbeat, a retro 1960's style watering hole touting a new dark gray concrete slab facade. Opening early June, the faux brick frontage of Dusty's has been shed to reveal a zig zag form that's not quite Google. No word yet on the drink program, but expect something on this side of approachable. [EaterWire]

The Figueroa-Riverside Bridge was built in 1927 near the confluence of the Los Angeles River and the Arroyo Seco. (Brian van der Brug, Los Angeles Times)

By Emily Alpert Reyes
May 28, 2014, 10:03 PM

A city commission rejected the idea Wednesday of converting an aging bridge spanning the Los Angeles River into a "land bridge," after city engineers warned that the effort could jeopardize federal money needed for a new bridge replacing it.

Neighborhood activists and architects had envisioned turning the old Riverside Drive bridge into a "bridging green space" through which bicyclists and pedestrians could cross the river. Architect Kevin Mulcahy, whose firm RAC Design Build laid out a plan for converting the bridge, described the imagined connector as "the missing link" that would tie together celebrated initiatives to revive the riverfront. The idea comes amid a flurry of plans to revitalize portions of the Los Angeles River, centering on a proposed $1- billion remake of an 11-mile stretch of the waterway just north of downtown.

Demolishing the old concrete and metal truss bridge was part of the replacement plan that the City Council approved eight years ago. Backers of the land bridge point out that when those plans were made, the new bridge was expected to take the same place as the old one. Instead, the new bridge is being built further upstream.

More than 2,000 people have signed an online petition to spare the bridge, including almost 1,400 Los Angeles residents, backers told the Los Angeles Board of Public Works, a five-member panel appointed by Mayor Eric Garcetti. The old bridge, built in 1927, was designated as a historic monument seven years ago after city leaders had already voted to replace it.

"If we tear it down now and decide in two years, 'You know, we could have saved that bridge'...what a tragedy that would be," Eagle Rock resident Bob Inman told the board.

But city officials said the plan faced a host of practical problems.

Interim city engineer Deborah Weintraub said their "back of the envelope estimate" put the cost of converting the old bridge between $15 million and $25 million. Weintraub added that keeping the bridge — scheduled to be demolished within weeks — would end up delaying the new one, because construction plans rely on accessing the site. She added that the new bridge was already designed to allow bicycle and pedestrian access.

City officials also argued that altering construction plans to spare the old bridge could put them at risk of not getting reimbursed with federal funding, which is expected to pay for the bulk of the project. In addition, city structural engineering director Sunny Patel warned that the old bridge had a design with "absolutely no redundancy," leaving it vulnerable if one part of it failed.

Mulcahy countered that the bridge design was an issue, but one that could be addressed with added retrofitting. Tomas O'Grady, executive director of the nonprofit EnrichLA, challenged the rough cost estimates offered by city officials, arguing that "a guess is not good enough" to write off the bridge. Other supporters contended that a completely carless path would be a uniquely valuable amenity.

Their arguments failed to sway the commission, which voted unanimously to stick to city plans for the bridge. Mayor Garcetti and City Councilman Gil Cedillo, whose district includes the area where the project is located, had concluded earlier that the land bridge — though appealing — was not feasible.

Decision-makers "have figured that we can't afford to risk the federal funds that we have," Commissioner Mike Davis said. He added, "It is not because you have not put forth a great proposal."

6 Hack for LA

HackLA
<http://www.hackforla.org/>

Hack for LA, an event based on the concept of “civic hacking,” offers government agencies, businesses, nonprofits and civically engaged individuals the opportunity to work together to move into a new era of solving complex social problems through technology innovation.

Hack for LA is a call to action for anyone in Los Angeles who wants to make an impact. Anyone can get involved, irrespective of professional experience. Projects can address any challenge facing the community, such as a mobile app that enables drivers to report potholes, to platforms that address food and housing distribution for those in need. The first “hack-a-thon” was held in June 2013, with over 400 people participating and over 35 apps developed and submitted.

On May 31 and June 1 at City Hall, hundreds of participants in the third Hack for LA event will gather to work on innovative projects that use technology to improve city services and engage citizens in a meaningful way. Registration is now closed, and we look forward to seeing the creativity flow!

“Hack for LA is a great example of how we can harness technology and our city’s creativity to solve everyday problems,” said Mayor Eric Garcetti, praising the program’s emphasis on the innovative power of technology as a civic engagement tool. “I will closely partner with our tech industry to create jobs and bring innovation to City Hall so government works faster and more efficiently.”

Visit the Hack for LA website to learn more and sign up to receive information about future events.

New bridge is pictured in the middle; the old bridge at the bottom. the 5 Freeway is at the top.

One day after a city commission voted against preserving the old Riverside Drive bridge, traffic began flowing on the partially completed, replacement bridge being constructed next to the old structure that links Cypress Park and Elysian Valley.

Traffic was shifted today from the old, L-shaped bridge (pictured at the bottom of the photo) to the new, approximately 900-foot-long span (pictured in the middle) that crosses the L.A. River near Elysian Park. The shift in traffic was accompanied by a new set of detours on nearby streets. Construction to finish the new bridge expected to continue until next year.

Meanwhile, demolition of the old bridge is expected to begin in a few weeks despite a nearly year-long effort to save the concrete and metal-truss bridge for use as a public space over the L.A. River.

Hi All,

Lummis Day Art Exhibition by LFCSA Students this Sunday from 12 to 5pm
Lummis Home Garden

I wanted to personally invite you to visit the student art exhibition taking place in the Lummis Home Garden (see attached brochure). The exhibits are the final projects by students along the themes explored during their field trip to the Living Museum: Sycamore Grove, that you all so generously helped over the past two months by sharing your time, knowledge, opening your homes and galleries and museums to these young minds. We will have many wonderful and inspiring pieces on display, including 10 student dioramas displayed in a "Mayan Tunnel", poetry pieces in the landscape, a Tongva Village and more that we're very excited about. Hope you all can drop by!

The collaborative project by 5th and 6th graders from the Arts Charter School in Glassell Park is also being covered by KCET Youth Departures.
